

Dr. Roy Bar Sadeh is a global historian of South Asia and the Middle East. His research moves across the British, Ottoman, and Russian Empires and their successor states to understand how Muslims across the Indian subcontinent and the Mashriq experienced and shaped local and global debates about sovereignty, minority status, and management of religious difference. Roy received his PhD in history from Columbia University and he is currently working on his first monograph, Muslims and the Minority Question: A Global History, 1856-1947. Recasting Minority is a global intellectual history of the concept of a minority and its role in connecting Muslim thinkers throughout South and West Asia and Eurasia. Roy's previous peer-reviewed research has been published in Comparative Studies of South Asia, Africa and the Middle East, and Kritika: Explorations in Russian and Eurasian History. During the 2022-23 academic year Roy will be a postdoctoral fellow in the Abdallah S. Kamel Center for the Study of Islamic Law and Civilization at Yale University Law School.
