

Aseel Najib is a postdoctoral fellow at the Abdallah S. Kamel Center for the Study of Islamic Law and Civilization at Yale Law School. Her research interests lie at the intersection of law, politics, and economics, with a particular focus on the Islamic legal tradition. She studies these subjects in conversation with contemporary debates in political, critical, and postcolonial theory. Her current research focuses on the legal theory and historical practice of land taxation in the early Islamic period. Through the lens of land taxation, she queries the relationships between law, politics, and capital; the state and land; and conquest and the international order. Prior to joining Yale, Aseel studied at Columbia University and the Harvard Divinity School. Her research has been funded by the Mellon Foundation, the American Center of Oriental Research, and the Sakıp Sabancı Institute.