Index of the Disappeared is both a physical archive of post-9/11 disappearances—detentions, deportations, renditions, redactions—and a platform for public dialogue around related issues. How has the archive been useful in advocacy? How might the project illuminate linkages between black sites abroad and mass incarceration in the United States? What insights result from conceptualizing this (or any project with strong activist goals) as artistic practice? How, if at all, has the cultural, institutional, and intellectual position of the “artist” uniquely enabled the development and deployment of this archive?

*New title; formerly listed as Mobilizing Attention by Telling Human Rights Stories Through Objects

5:00 – 6:00 p.m.
