

BIOGRAPHIES FOR THE RECIPIENTS OF YLS FELLOWSHIPS AND FELLOWSHIPS SPONSORED BY OTHER INSTITUTIONS

ARTHUR LIMAN PUBLIC INTEREST FELLOWSHIP

Spencer Amdur will spend his fellowship year working on immigration issues with the Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights of the San Francisco Bay Area. Spencer will help the effort to provide free legal services to immigrants facing removal and to address enforcement by federal and local authorities of immigration laws. Spencer, a member of the Yale Law School class of 2013, graduated magna cum laude from Brown University with a B.A. in Economics. Before law school, he worked as an Assistant Economist at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and taught math at the Harlem Village Academy. After his fellowship, Spencer will clerk for the Honorable Judith W. Rogers of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Alyssa Briody will join Juvenile Regional Services in New Orleans; her focus will be on providing counsel for juveniles in the detention system. Her work will include helping boys, incarcerated at the Bridge City Center for Youth, to modify their terms of confinement, become eligible for release, and develop plans for their return to their communities. A member of the Yale Law School class of 2013, Alyssa graduated cum laude from Amherst College in 2007 with a B.A. in Latin American History. Following her fellowship, Alyssa will clerk for the Honorable Sidney Stein in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York.

Burke Butler will work at the Texas Civil Rights Project on the problems of long-term isolation and specifically the harms to individuals with mental illness. Her project continues her work on prisoners' rights when she was at Yale Law School, from which she graduated in 2011. Prior to law school, Burke attended the University of Chicago, where she focused on human rights projects in Peru, India, and Afghanistan. She is currently clerking for Judge Harris Hartz of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit and, last year, clerked for Judge Keith Ellison of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Texas.

Katie Chamblee will help the Southern Center for Human Rights to initiate a program to provide systematic consulting assistance to lawyers working on capital cases. The goal is to strengthen the quality of counsel for poor people facing the death penalty in Georgia and throughout the South. Katie graduated from Yale Law School in 2012 and is clerking for the Honorable Myron H. Thompson on the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Alabama. She graduated with Highest Honors in History and English in 2007 from Swarthmore College, where she was a Philip Evans Scholar.

Jeremy Kaplan-Lyman will join the Civil Action Practice at The Bronx Defenders, where he will work on challenges to the quota-based summons practices of the New York City Police Department (NYPD). Jeremy will investigate the impact of the NYPD's summons practices on marginalized communities, represent individuals in Summons Court, and help to initiate affirmative litigation when abusive summons practices are identified. A 2012 graduate of Yale Law School, Jeremy is currently clerking for the Honorable Rosemary Barkett of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. Prior to law school, Jeremy worked as a teacher and graduation coach in public schools in Camden, New Jersey and Atlanta, Georgia, where he helped found the South Atlanta School for Law and Social Justice, a high-performing school for low-income students.

Caitlin Mitchell will spend her fellowship year at Youth, Rights & Justice, in Portland, Oregon, where she will represent incarcerated parents in Juvenile Court and help them to maintain relationships with their children. Through direct representation, coalition-building, and resource development, Caitlin's project aims to improve the quality of legal representation for families interacting with the criminal justice system. Caitlin graduated from Yale Law School in 2012 and from Yale College in 2006 with a B.A. in English and Gender Studies. Prior to law school, Caitlin worked as a counselor and community educator for a sexual assault crisis center in New Haven, CT. She is currently clerking for the Honorable Martha Lee Walters of the Oregon Supreme Court.

Ivy Wang, who will be at Southeast Louisiana Legal Services in New Orleans, will focus on the many collateral consequences of incarceration, such as evictions based on family members' involvement with the criminal justice system, loss of employment opportunities, and public benefits. Her effort will include creating training materials to help other lawyers mitigate these long-term consequences. Ivy, a member of the Yale Law School Class of 2013, graduated in 2006 from Yale College with distinctions in English and History. Prior to law school, she spent four years in China working on human rights and legal reform.

Alyssa Work will join the Bronx Freedom Fund, where she will assist individuals facing misdemeanor criminal charges to post bail and to avoid pretrial detention. During her fellowship year, she will help develop alternative resources to enable a wider range of individuals to be able to meet bail requirements. Her work will be part of broader efforts to reform bail systems to reduce incarceration. Alyssa is member of the Yale Law School Class of 2013 and graduated in 2008 with High Honors in Political Science from Swarthmore College. Before law school, she worked as a legal assistant at a law firm focused on immigration in Washington, D.C.

Three current Liman Fellows will continue their projects for an additional year, thanks to matching funds from their host organizations.

Rebecca Scholtz of the YLS class of 2011 is working with the Legal Aid Society of Minneapolis, where she provides legal assistance to immigrant children who are involved in the child welfare system. Joining other service providers and community groups, Rebecca is helping to develop a system-wide procedure for providing immigration law assistance to abused, neglected, and abandoned children.

Sirine Shebaya is helping to launch a project on immigrants' rights at the ACLU of Maryland. She will continue and expand the work she began this year to address racial profiling of Latino youth and the misuse of immigration detainers.

Jenny Zhao, who is at the ACLU of Northern California, provides assistance to immigrants detained in county jails during their deportation proceedings. Along with other lawyers, Jenny is litigating a class action challenge to the practice of shackling all immigrant detainees in transit to/from and during hearings. She is also investigating how prolonged detention and conditions of confinement affect immigrants' access to courts and their rights to fair hearings.

GRUBER FELLOWSHIP IN GLOBAL JUSTICE AND WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Glenda M. Aldana Madrid will work at the Northwest Immigrant Rights Project in Seattle to further the global cause for migrants' rights by combating Border Patrol's abusive interior enforcement practices. Specifically, Glenda will work to curtail Border Patrol's use of racial profiling while conducting roving patrol stops in Washington State. She will do so by developing and filing administrative complaints and damages suits challenging Border Patrol's actions, assisting NWIRP's partner organizations in doing the same, and representing individuals facing removal in immigration court as a result of Border Patrol's transgressions. Glenda, a member of the Yale Law School Class of 2013, graduated magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from Harvard College in 2007, where she concentrated in Social Studies. After college, she worked for the Human Rights Foundation, a NYC-based non-governmental organization devoted to defending and promoting civil and political rights in the Americas. Among her activities at the law school, Glenda has been active in the Worker and Immigrant Rights Advocacy Clinic as well as the Latino/a Law Students' Association.

Andrew Iliff will work at the Counseling Services Unit (CSU) in Harare, Zimbabwe, focusing on restoring the social capital of survivors of organized violence and torture. Anticipating renewed political violence and intimidation during the upcoming elections, CSU provided community leaders with a core curriculum of legal and medical counseling. Andrew will extend this pilot project and implement other community healing strategies following the elections in Zimbabwe. Andrew graduated magna cum laude from Harvard College, and worked at the Open Democracy Advice Centre in Cape Town, South Africa as a Third Millennium Fellow following graduation. Returning to the United States, Andrew completed a joint degree in law and African Studies at Yale University.

Marvin Lim will spend his fellowship year working with the ACLU's Center for Liberty in New York. He will spearhead a new effort to facilitate strategic coordination among the International Network of Civil Liberties Organisations on issues where religious freedom and equal treatment intersect. This effort seeks to combat synchronized, transnational efforts both to limit religious freedom in a manner disproportionately impacting women or other minorities (e.g., burqa ban), or to invoke religious freedom in a way that creates this disproportionate impact (e.g., certain religious conscience clauses). Marvin will draft comparative analysis of legal challenges abroad, propose harmonizing litigation strategies, and coordinate tactical collaborative filings. Before joining Yale Law School's Class of 2013, Marvin graduated magna cum laude from Emory University, then worked in international security and development.

Jeff Love, a 2012 graduate of Yale Law School, will spend his fellowship year working with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) in The Hague, Netherlands. He graduated from Stanford University in 2007 with a B.A. in Political Science and an M.A. in International Policy Studies. Before law school, Jeff worked on political accountability and legislative reform in Kampala, Uganda. At the ICTY, he will support the work of Judge Liu Daqun on a variety of cases involving atrocities alleged to have occurred during the 1990s Balkan war.

HEYMAN FEDERAL PUBLIC SERVICE FELLOWSHIP

Sam Adelsberg, a member of the Yale Law School class of 2013, will serve as a special assistant to the Under Secretary of Treasury for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence (TFI), David Cohen. TFI plays the lead role in formulating and implementing U.S. policy to combat illicit finance by using key intelligence to map illicit financial networks and funds movements in the interest of advancing national security. Sam will work closely with Under Secretary Cohen to help combat the financing of terrorism and to help impose financial and economic pressure on government such as Iran, Syria and North Korea. Most recently, Sam was a special assistant to Brigadier General Mark Martins, the main prosecutor in the trial of those accused of orchestrating 9/11. Sam graduated summa cum laude with Phi Beta Kappa honors from the University of Pennsylvania where he studied Modern Middle East Studies and Philosophy, Politics and Economics.

Miriam R. Estrin will work as Advisor to the Office of the U.S. Special Envoy for Israeli-Palestinian Negotiations at the U.S. Department of State. A member of the Yale Law School class of 2013, she spent her summers at law school working at the White House National Security Council, the White House Counsel's Office, and the State Department Legal Adviser's Office. Before coming to Yale, she served as Special Assistant to the President's Special Envoy to Sudan at the U.S. Department of State and worked in Foreign Policy Studies at the Brookings Institution. She graduated from The University of Texas at Austin in 2008 with highest honors.

Alice "Kate" Hadley will spend her fellowship year working as a special assistant to the General Counsel of the U.S. Trade Representative. She will work on trade litigation, including World Trade Organization cases, and on international trade negotiations. Kate, a member of the YLS class of 2013, is from Washington, DC and graduated with distinction from Stanford University in 2008. Prior to law school, she taught third grade for two years in Atlanta, Georgia. At Yale, Kate developed her interest in foreign and national security law and policy as an articles editor on the Yale Journal of International Law and through a summer internship at the Justice Department's National Security Division.

Daniel Schuker will serve as a Special Counsel to the General Counsel at the National Security Agency. As a Heyman Fellow, Daniel will work closely with General Counsel Rajesh De and advise senior leadership and agency personnel on intelligence law, cyber law, and other subjects. The Office of General Counsel is responsible for providing legal advice on all missions and related areas and also participates in interagency processes and congressional oversight. Daniel graduated magna cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from Harvard College in 2008. Before attending Yale, he worked at the National Economic Council at the White House. A member of the Class of 2013, Daniel served as Executive Editor of The Yale Law Journal and was a member of the Supreme Court Advocacy Clinic. After the Heyman Fellowship, Daniel will serve as a law clerk to Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson III of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

INITIATIVE FOR PUBLIC INTEREST AT YALE

Diana Blank will spend her fellowship year at New Haven Legal Assistance Association, where she will work to reshape and expand the organization's capacity to represent its undocumented immigrant clients. Her work will combine complex litigation, direct representation, and alliance-building with grassroots immigrant groups, law enforcement officers, and administrative agencies. A member of the Yale Law School Class of 2013, Diana holds a Bachelor's Degree in Modern Thought and Literature from Stanford University and a Doctorate in Social Anthropology from the University of California at Berkeley.

ROBERT L. BERNSTEIN FELLOWSHIP IN INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS

Mytili Bala, a 2009 Yale Law School graduate, will spend her fellowship year with the Center for Justice and Accountability (CJA) in San Francisco. Mytili will engage in fact-gathering efforts for CJA's active investigations in order to secure and preserve admissible evidence for potential civil litigation in the United States and for international accountability efforts. Mytili will also assist CJA with motion practice and related appeals for its pending cases under the Alien Tort Statute and Torture Victim Protection Act. Mytili earned a B.A. in Economics with Honors from the University of Chicago in 2005. At the Law School, she participated in the Community Lawyering Clinic and the Temporary Restraining Order Project and was a Senior Editor of the Yale Human Rights and Development Law Journal. As a Kirby Simon Summer Human Rights Fellow at People's Watch, an NGO in Madurai, India, Mytili drafted incident reports of police torture and helped organize people's tribunals in connection with the National Project on Preventing Torture in India. Following law school, Mytili worked as a litigation associate at Kirkland & Ellis LLP and Irell & Manella LLP.

Carrick Flynn graduated from the Law School in 2011. He will be at the Human Rights Law Network in New Delhi, India. As part of the reproductive rights unit, he will work on a variety of projects related to coercive sterilization, maternal mortality, child marriage, sexual education, the right to food, and access to family planning and contraception. He will also lead a project focusing on the abuses of India's rapidly growing clinical-testing industry. While at the Law School, Carrick served as a submissions editor for the Yale Human Rights and Development Law Journal and as an editor for the Yale Journal of International Law. He also advised asylum seekers with the Iraqi Refugee Assistance Project. He spent his first summer with The Carter Center in Liberia, where he designed human rights training materials for Liberian magistrates and wrote a report making recommendations on how to integrate the customary and formal court systems of the country. His second summer, he worked at The Asia Foundation in Timor-Leste on access to justice. After graduation, Carrick returned to Timor-Leste, where he volunteered for the development NGO Progressio before working as a legal consultant at the Asia Foundation. He earned a B.A. summa cum laude from the University of Oregon with a double major in Economics and International Studies, with an emphasis on the economic development of sub-Saharan Africa.

Ignacio Mujica will receive his LL.M. degree from the Law School in May 2013. During his LL.M. studies, he has been a Fulbright Scholar. Ignacio will spend his fellowship year working in the Crimes Against Humanity Program of Human Rights First. His work will focus, first, on establishing the identities of the networks of states, corporations, and individuals that provide material support to groups that perpetrate mass atrocities and, second, on the domestic and international actions that can be taken to disrupt those networks. Ignacio's studies at Yale have focused on international human rights law, international humanitarian law and international criminal law. A native Chilean, he holds an LL.B degree from the University of Chile. Before coming to Yale, he worked both in academic research and in litigation on human rights in Chile, with a particular emphasis on transitional justice and criminal law.

ROBINA FOUNDATION HUMAN RIGHTS FELLOWSHIP

Sue Guan graduated from the Law School in 2012. She will spend her fellowship year working in the chambers of the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in The Hague. Sue competed in the International Criminal Court Moot Competition. She also served as Submissions Editor of the Yale Journal of International Law and Publicity Chair for the Asian Pacific American Law Students Association. During her summers, Sue worked in the Trial Chambers of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and in the New York and Beijing offices of Cleary Gottlieb Steen & Hamilton LLP. After graduating from law school, Sue clerked for Judge Carlos F. Lucero on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in Denver, Colorado.

Julie Hunter graduated from the Law School in 2013. She will spend her Fellowship year in Strasbourg, France, working at the European Court of Human Rights. In law school, Julie has worked on many projects with the Lowenstein Human Rights Clinic, including reports on the trafficking and abuse of third-country nationals on U.S. military bases, the rise of homeless encampments in the United States, and development-induced displacement of Bedouin tribes in the Negev. She also conducted a legal analysis for the Canadian Truth and Reconciliation Commission on the Indian residential school system. She served as an advisor for the Papua New Guinea mission to the United Nations. During her summers, she worked for DNA, a legal aid organization on the Navajo reservation, and for human rights attorney Paul Hoffman on Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum and Adhikari v. Daoud. Julie received her B.A. in 2007 from Harvard College and her M.Sc. in International Relations from the London School of Economics in 2008. From 2008 to 2010, she worked for the regional advocacy program of the Coalition for the International Criminal Court Scarlet Kim graduated from the Law School in 2011. She will spend her fellowship year working in the Legal and Enforcement Unit of the Presidency of the International Criminal Court. She participated in several student clinics, where she represented an individual incarcerated in solitary confinement in a Connecticut state prison, workers applying for Trade Adjustment Assistance, and a refugee in asylum proceedings. After law school, Scarlet was a Gruber Fellow in Global Justice at the New York Civil Liberties Union. As a Gruber Fellow, Scarlet investigated the use of solitary confinement in New York state prisons and authored a report documenting her findings. Scarlet is currently clerking for the Honorable John Gleeson of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York. Scarlet graduated from Yale College in 2005 with a B.A. in History and International Studies. Prior to law school, she studied in China on a Fulbright Fellowship and worked as a research associate at the Council on Foreign Relations.

Ryan Liss is a member of the LL.M. class of 2013. For his fellowship, he will be working at an international criminal tribunal. Ryan's work and studies have focused on international criminal law and international human rights law. He has worked with the Office of the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, the Coalition for the International Criminal Court (both in New York and at the Kampala Review Conference), the Canadian Centre for International Justice, and the Canadian International Development Agency (as a human rights intern in Manila, The Philippines). Ryan received his J.D. and B.A. from the University of Toronto. While completing his J.D., he was Editor-in-Chief of the University of Toronto's Journal of International Law and International Relations, competed in the Jessup Moot and the International Criminal Court Moot Competition, and worked with the International Human Rights Clinic and the refugee law division of Toronto's Downtown Legal Services clinic. After graduating from law school, Ryan clerked for the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Appeal. He has continued his focus on human rights at Yale as a member of the Lowenstein International Human Rights Clinic

James Shih will graduate from the Law School in May 2013. He will spend his fellowship year working in the chambers of the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in The Hague. In law school, James served as a Comments & Online Features Editor for the Yale Journal of International Law. His interest in international criminal law was sparked by his participation as a first-year student in the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia Project, which he went on to co-direct in his second-year. He was a member of the Law School's 2012 team to the International Criminal Court Moot Competition North America Round, at which he and his teammates swept the Best Briefs honors, and he served as an assistant coach to the 2013 team. During his summers, James interned at the U.S. Attorney's Office in the Southern District of New York and at the law firm of Skadden Arps, where he worked primarily on criminal matters. James graduated magna cum laude from Northwestern University, where he studied journalism. During and after college, he worked at several international news media organizations, including NHK Japan Broadcasting Corporation, the International Herald Tribune, CBS and China Daily.

She is the author of over twenty manuscripts and articles on US and European immigration and refugee policy, and has consulted for Atlantic Philanthropies (Dublin, Ireland), the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit in London, the World Bank, and a number of immigration think tanks. In addition to her law degree, Betsy holds a DPhil in Politics from Oxford University, an M.Sc. in Forced Migration from Oxford University, and a B.A. in Industrial and Labor Relations from Cornell University.

Katherine D'Ambrosio will spend her fellowship year at the Georgia Advocacy Office, where she will focus on the right of people with developmental disabilities to be fully integrated into their communities. Her project will be part of a broader effort to deinstitutionalize thousands of Georgians with disabilities through the reallocation of resources from institutional settings toward supports that afford opportunities for community integration. Katherine graduated from Wesleyan University with a B.A. in History and is a member of the Yale Law School Class of 2012. She is currently clerking for the Honorable Joel H. Bolger on the Alaska Supreme Court.

Courtney Hostetler, a member of the class of 2011, will join the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts for her fellowship year. Her project will focus on combating the criminalization of school discipline and challenging civil rights violations in school punishment practices. Courtney clerked for the Honorable James L. Dennis of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit immediately after graduation. Prior to law school, Courtney graduated summa cum laude from Colgate University and received her M.Phil from Oxford University. She also worked for the Close Up Foundation and as an analyst for the Genocide Intervention Network.

Charanya Krishnaswami, a member of the Yale Law School Class of 2013, will spend her fellowship year at the Rocky Mountain Immigrant Advocacy Network (RMIAN) where she will launch a direct representation pilot project for immigrants in detention in Aurora, CO. Immigration detention facilities face a representation crisis: today, nearly 85% of detained immigrants navigate immigration proceedings without the aid of counsel. During her fellowship year, Charanya will provide direct representation for detained immigrants in bond hearings and individual merits cases. She will also research and analyze systemic issues related to representation to maximize access to counsel within the facility. Prior to law school, Charanya graduated summa cum laude from Southern Methodist University in Dallas, TX with majors in Political Science, French, and Finance. At YLS, she participated in the Worker and Immigrant Rights Advocacy Clinic and Transnational Development Clinic. She also served on the Board of Yale Law Women, as a Coker Fellow, and on the Yale Law Journal and Yale Journal of International Law. Following her fellowship year, she will clerk for Judge Raymond C. Fisher on the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Pasadena, CA.

Nate Loewentheil, a member of 2013 Yale Law School class, will work as a policy advisor in the National Economic Council at the White House. There, he will focus on supporting President Obama's economic agenda by researching and developing policy focused on economic competitiveness. Nate developed a background in public policy while at Yale College, from which he graduated cum laude with a B.A. in the Program in Ethics, Politics and Economic in 2007. While an undergraduate, he helped found the Roosevelt Campus Network, a national student progressive organization, which he later ran as executive director from 2007 to 2009. Nate is the editor of a 2008 book, Thinking Big: Progressive Ideas for a New Era and the author of a number of papers and reports on economics and environmental policy and politics. His writing has appeared in the New York Times, Salon, Politico and The Democracy Journal, and he contributes regularly to outlets like The Huffington Post.

YLS PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION FELLOWSHIP

Romain Zamour graduated from the Yale Law School in 2013. Romain attended the Ecole Normale Supérieure de Paris and received his B.A. from the Sorbonne, where he studied philosophy. At the Yale Law School, Romain focused on international law and international arbitration. He served as a Submissions Editor for the Yale Journal of International Law and as Vice President for Events for the Yale Society of International Law, and participated in the Willem C. Vis International Commercial Arbitration Moot Court in 2011-12 and 2012-13.

EQUAL JUSTICE WORKS FELLOWSHIP

Lewis Bollard, member Yale Law School class of '13, will advocate for low-income victims of meat contamination from factory farms as an Equal Justice Works fellow at the Humane Society of the United States. His project focuses on building coalitions, negotiating with fast food chains and regulatory agencies, and litigating as necessary to achieve food justice. Lewis is a graduate of Harvard College.

CAMPAIGN LEGAL CENTER FELLOWSHIP

Emma Simson will work at the Campaign Legal Center (CLC) in Washington, DC after she graduates from Yale Law School in Spring 2013. As a fellow at the CLC, she will assist the Center's efforts to advance bipartisan campaign finance reforms through litigation in both state and federal courts. Emma graduated summa cum laude from the University of Maryland in 2007 and joined Teach for America's Metro DC Corps, where she taught high school social studies in Prince George's County, MD. After teaching and immediately prior to attending law school, Emma pursued an M.Sc. in Evidence-Based Social Interventions at the University of Oxford. After Emma's fellowship at the CLC, she will clerk for the Honorable James E. Boasberg on the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

SKADDEN FELLOWSHIP

Danielle Lang will spend her Skadden fellowship years at Bet Tzedek Legal Services in Los Angeles, California, where she will work in their Employment Rights Project. She will represent low-wage workers in wage theft, health and safety, and retaliation claims. Her project aims to systematize and deepen the currently ad hoc relationship between organizers and workers' rights lawyers in Los Angeles. She will also collaborate with organizers in order to identify repeat offenders as targets for larger-scale impact litigation. Danielle is currently clerking for the Honorable Richard Paez on the Ninth Circuit. She graduated from Yale Law School in 2012, where she worked in the Worker and Immigrant Rights Advocacy and Detention and Human Rights clinics. She graduated magna cum laude from New York University in 2008. Before law school, she worked for the New York Immigration Coalition, an umbrella advocacy organization for immigrant groups across the state.

Sofia Nelson will work on issues of reentry and mass incarceration at the American Civil Liberties Union of Michigan in Detroit, MI. Sofia will focus on providing legal support to people with criminal records who face barriers to employment and housing. A member of the Yale Law School class of 2013, Sofia graduated summa cum laude from Tufts University with a B.A. in Women's Studies and Political Science. Before law school, Sofia worked as an AmeriCorps VISTA in Burlington, VT assisting low-income individuals with their taxes and financial planning needs. While at Yale, Sofia interned at the ACLU of MI and The Defender Association in Seattle, WA. Sofia was also a member of the Veterans Legal Services Clinic.

Trudy Rebert, a member of the class of 2013, will join the New Orleans Workers' Center for Racial Justice to work with guestworkers in the Gulf Coast seafood industry. She will provide direct representation and legal support for organizing and advocacy campaigns to achieve dignified work by combating forced labor, retaliation, wage theft, and unsafe working conditions. Trudy is a 2006 Truman scholar, graduated summa cum laude from Macalester College with a B.A. in Geography and Political Science, and holds an M.Sc. in Migration, Mobility, and Development from the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. Prior to law school, she worked at the World Bank Inspection Panel in Washington, DC and on workers' rights issues in New Delhi, India.

SOROS JUSTICE ADVOCACY FELLOWSHIP

Amanda Alexander will start a Prison & Family Justice Project at the University of Michigan Law School's Detroit Center for Family Advocacy. The project will provide legal support to incarcerated parents and their families and challenge barriers to visitation and successful re-entry. A member of the Yale Law School class of 2013, Amanda graduated magna cum laude from Harvard College and received an M.A. degree in international history from Columbia University. Before law school, Amanda worked at the Centre for Civil Society in Durban, South Africa. While at Yale, she interned with The Bronx Defenders' Family Defense Practice and the Center for Constitutional Rights.

Marbre Stahly-Butts will be joining the Center for Popular Democracy in Brooklyn, New York as a Soros Justice Fellow in Fall 2013. She will be focusing on creating a peer-education curriculum and manual to address the needs of housing residents affected by criminal justice contact. Particularly, she will focus on supporting the development of a movement around ending drug-related evictions in New York City public housing. While attending Yale Law School, Marbre focused on the intersection of criminal justice and civil rights and gained legal experience with the Bronx Defenders, the Equal Justice Initiative and the Prison Policy Initiative. Before law school Marbre received her Masters in African Studies from Oxford University and spent a year in Zimbabwe working on issues of community healing and restoration. Marbre graduated summa cum laude from Columbia University, with a B.A. in African-American History and Human Rights.
