

Mona Mostafa is a PhD candidate in Islamic Legal Theory (Uṣūl al-Fiqh) and Assistant Lecturer at Al-Azhar University in Egypt. Her dissertation examines how contemporary Egyptian fatwa institutions interpret and apply inherited jurisprudential methodologies in changing social, ethical, and institutional contexts, with particular attention to maqāṣid-based reasoning, women's dignitary rights, and family law fatwas. At Yale, she will further develop her research on the relationship between Islamic legal theory, institutional religious authority, and contemporary legal and ethical change.
