The State of U.S.-China Relations: How we got here, and what now?

Ambassador Charlene Barshefsky

Ambassador Charlene Barshefsky is best known as the U.S. Trade Representative in President Bill Clinton’s administration. She is globally recognized as the architect and negotiator of China’s historic WTO accession agreement, which opened China’s economy as a worldwide market. Until recently, she was Senior International Partner at WilmerHale in Washington, DC and chair of the firm’s international trade group. She is now Chair of Parkside Global Advisors. Ambassador Barshefsky is a major participant in current debates about the U.S.-China relationship.
