“Diva of Distressed”

She’s “all woman” and she’s got a messiah complex about her role in the distressed assets sector. But Lynne Tilton, the head of Patriarch Partners, the 7-billion-dollar takeover firm, who got a B.A. at Yale and an M.B.A. at Columbia, is serious business.

Efficient-market hypothesis at SCOTUS?

On April 25, the Supreme Court will hear arguments in Erica P. John Fund v. Halliburton, a securities fraud-on-the-market case. But what makes this case turn? Contentions about the efficient-market hypothesis, standards for class certification or the 5th Circuit’s right to interpret the rules of civil procedure as they please? Thoughts?

Contract Hybrid for Social Entrepreneurs

Wanna run a business that does well and good, too? There may be some roadblocks: “Creating a hybrid entity that can serve both charitable goals and business objectives simultaneously may sound simple, but from a legal perspective it is actually quite complicated.”

Message from Marianna & Jackie:

The Yale Law and Business Society was created in 2006 to facilitate the interests of students in corporate law and business. In 2011 - 2012, YLBS will focus on building a deeper sense of community among the society’s membership as well as stronger connections with counterpart societies at other law schools.

Look out for lots of new and exciting ways to get involved and makes sure to check out and contribute ideas for the weekly newsletter. We’ll be finishing off the semester with two events: next week a M&A practice crash course session with a Kirkland & Ellis associate that will help you flex your skills this summer and on May 4th a delicious exam study break with Debevoise & Plimpton.

See you soon!
