One of the main challenges in activism today is the need for a strategy that both bridges and strengthens the fight against racial injustice and economic inequality. This means engaging sites as seemingly far apart as Ferguson and the Federal Reserve. How can we use legal skills to craft demands, from the ground up, that build community power and address the systemic issues that lie at the heart of injustice in both of these spaces? The Center for Popular Democracy's Ady Barkan '10 and Marbre Stahly-Butts '13 are at the frontlines of this work across the country. For the first forty minutes of this session, they will discuss lessons from their experiences with Professor Amy Kapczynski '03. In the final forty minutes, they will work with students to develop a plan for an ongoing campaign.

Thursday, December 3, 2015
Yale Law School
Room 128
12:10PM - 1:30PM

Hosted by:
Yale Global Health Justice Partnership,
National Lawyers Guild at Yale Law School,
American Constitution Society for Law and Policy at Yale Law School, and
The Center for Popular Democracy

Lunch will be provided

This event is funded by The Oscar M. Ruebhausen Fund